There are four steps that you should take to choose the appropriate hearing protection for yourself, team and your company.

1. Identify the nature of the noise. Is it a stable noise? Perhaps it fluctuates throughout the day, is intermittent or pulse?
2. Measure the noise - this is the intensity (dB) and the volume (Hz).
3. Work out the exposure time to this noise.
4. Calculate the required reduction to return the ear defender user to a background level of noise.

The safest level of noise in an environment where someone is working is 80dB. You must start to wear ear protection when the level of noise raises to 85dB.

The calculation to determine what ear defender you'll need, as well as its SNR rating is simple:

SNR EXPLAINED

Environment dB	- (minus)	Minimum Requirement dB	= (equals)	SNR Rating
112 dB	- (minus)	85 dB	= (equals)	SNR 27dB

The above calculation shows that if the working environment dB level is 112dB then you, your team and workforce should wear ear protection that has an SNR rating of 27dB.
